

Dear Sirs,

In the past two months I have found my wife has breast cancer and requires a lot of rest. The Indiana state no call law has made it easier for my wife to get her rest for a recovery.

Under no circumstances do I want anyone calling my home after she goes to bed for the evening, especially someone trying to get money for the humane society, so they can feed the unwed mother cats. I know this is an extreme condition but it is how I feel about my privacy being taken away from me and my wife.

At times we would receive up to 10 calls a night and some were after 9:00 p.m.. I go to bed myself around 7:30 in the evening for the fact I have to get out of bed at 3:00 a.m. so I can get ready for work and fix my wife's meals for the day. Maybe it would be OK for me to call some of you and wake you up and try and sell you some beach front property here in Indiana, let's say about 11:30 p.m. after you go to bed.

This sounds a little harsh, but that is exactly how I feel.

Please leave well enough alone. To coin a phrase, "If it ain't broke, don't fix the damned thing"

Raymond Roberts

cutter@peoplepc.com